Short summary of Jessica Biasin's research:

This project will examine whether day-to-day lie-telling relates to real-time changes in perceived rewards and threats among undergraduate students. Drawing on the Reinforcement Sensitivity Theory (Gray, 1970), we will test whether daily experiences of rewards (e.g., praise, inclusion) and threats (e.g., criticism, rejection) predict the frequency and type of lies told, while accounting for opportunities to lie through social interaction frequency.

To better understand when and why people lie, we will recruit undergraduate students to complete brief daily surveys over one week. Participants will report their number and the types of lies they tell, their daily experiences of rewards and threats, as well as their social interactions. We will also measure individual differences in reward and threat sensitivity.

Data will be analyzed using multilevel modelling to examine whether within-person fluctuations in perceived rewards and threats predict daily lie-telling, and whether these associations vary according to baseline reward and threat sensitivity. By examining how daily experiences relate to lie-telling in real time, this research will provide new insight into the motivations behind everyday dishonesty and help clarify why some individuals lie more often than others.

Events

The EAPL regularly organizes events specifically focusing on the needs and interests of our student and early-career members. Feel free to send us an e-mail at eaplstudent@gmail.com if there are any particular topics you'd like to see a workshop on in the future. Any upcoming events will be featured below.

PAST EVENTS

Getting Published Workshop – 10 June 2026

On 10 June 2026, EAPL hosted a free online workshop, Getting Published, led by Dr Dean Fido.

Dr Dean Fido is an Associate Professor of Forensic Psychology at the University of Derby (UK). In addition to supporting postgraduate and doctoral students across a range of publication topics, including domestic abuse, media psychology, and nature connectedness, his primary research focus is image-based sexual abuse. Alongside numerous research publications and textbooks, Dr Fido has contributed to governmental discussions and helped inform policy in this area.

The workshop was attended by EAPL members, including students and early career researchers, and provided practical guidance and insight into:

- Developing research outputs
- Navigating the publication process
- Building confidence in academic publishing
- Responding to reviewers and preparing manuscript submissions

The workshop formed part of EAPL's ongoing commitment to supporting students and early career researchers in developing their research and publication skills.

Grant Writing Workshop October 9th 2024

The EAPL was thrilled to hold an online workshop on grant writing on October 9th 2024 by Prof. Lorraine Hope.

"In this 2-hour workshop for early career researchers, we'll talk about turning your research idea into an application for funding, the opportunities and pitfalls in preparing funding bids, how to give your bid the best chance in competition and, importantly, recovering from rejection if it doesn't work out. Most of the workshop will be a lecture format based on my experience of over 20 years of applying for funding both in the UK and internationally, including some useful resources I've encountered along the way. There will also be some individual encountered at the way. There will also be some individual exercises and, hopefully, plenty of tips and suggestions you can take away from the session. As this session will involve participants from multiple countries, I won't focus on specific funders or schemes – but the content should be applicable to any opportunity that you decide to go for!"

Local Representatives

Our local representatives are a resource for students looking to pursue careers in psychology and law within their allocated country. Do you want to know how to pursue a degree in forensic and legal psychology? Our amazing team of local representatives is here to answer your questions!
